Bradley Stonesifer is a narrative cinematographer and a commercial director/dp with more than 20 years behind the lens. He has credits spanning narrative features, TV Shows, feature documentary, and large-scale commercial work. Bradley has shot for studios, networks, and brands defining modern visual storytelling – including Microsoft, T-Mobile, Google, Samsung, Apple, Absolut, Fossil, and Subaru.

Some of his narrative work includes Kiss the Future (Artists Equity; Official Selection, Berlinale), the Sundance titles Call Me Lucky, The Vicious Kind and Me + Her, Bobcat Goldthwait's God Bless America (selection Toronto & SXSW), the LA Film Festival-winning documentary Fire on the Hill, and Dax Shepard's Hit and Run playing in over 3000 theaters nationwide. On the commercial side he has lensed hundreds of broadcast spots, including more than a dozen Super Bowl commercials for T-Mobile and Microsoft, and directed Microsoft's 2024 Super Bowl campaign, Watch Me, for its Copilot AI platform.

As the image-maker among the In Cahoots partners, Bradley is the one who turns a story into something an audience can see – big, intimate, emotionally exact frames that make people feel something before they understand why. He is also founder and operating partner of media[box] CAMERA in Culver City, a boutique camera equipment house serving the film and commercial community. A member of ICG Local 600 and a graduate of the Brooks Institute of Photography, Bradley is based in Los Angeles.
